SPRING FEVER

IT was spring, fresh, lovely and warm!

As Skitch Squirrel walked to school in the fine, fresh morning air, he could see hundreds of field flowers, bright and gay, and hear birds chirping from the hedgerows, which were green with new leaves. Who wouldn't feel happy, on such a day? But suddenly, Skitch felt unhappy! "A wonderful day like this," he thought, "and I have to spend it indoors!"

The more he thought about it, the slower he walked. He was within sight of the School House by now, and he could see Miss Jones, the teacher, walking in at the front door. It was then that his worse nature whispered to him, "Why do you have to go to school today? It would be so wonderful to spend it outdoors. You've never done this, so what harm can just one day's holiday do?" Around he turned and bounded off, feeling free and light as air!

Now, Skitch's decision may have been made quickly, but we wouldn't want you to think that it was an easy one. You see, up to now, his attendance record had been perfect, unmarred by a single absence—and he was plenty proud of it! But now he had succumbed to temptation. He tried not to think of it, but it was hard to down the twinges of his conscience. And right now, he was very careful as he made his way through the forest to Marigold Meadow, his favorite playground. He didn't want anyone to see him, for news traveled fast in these parts, and Miss Jones might hear that Skitch Squirrel had been seen on a school day, a truant! Instead of taking his usual path, therefore, Skitch ran along back lanes and byroads. Every time he heard an unusual sound, he jumped behind a bush or crouched down in the shadow of a rock. He knew that he wouldn't be safe until he reached Marigold Meadow, with all its lovely privacy. As a matter of fact, things weren't turning out the way he'd wanted them. He wasn't having a good time at all—and felt practically a fugitive! Was it for this that he had marred his perfect attendance record? All of a sudden, he wished he was back in the classroom, where he belonged—no matter how lovely the day was!

Skitch was in sight of his goal now—but something was wrong! He could hear voices as he approached—many voices! Who could be in Marigold Meadow at this time of day—when everyone should have been either at work or in school? Cautiously, Skitch peered through the underbrush—and recoiled in amazement! For there was his teacher, Miss Jones, addressing all of his schoolmates! Skitch could just make out what she was saying. "—so I arranged this picnic as a special surprise for you, class! It's too bad that Skitch Squirrel couldn't be here with us, but he must be sick at home! That, unfortunately, spoils his perfect attendance record, and I have no choice but to give this solid gold medal for the best attendance to Roger Rabbit!"

Poor Skitch slunk off, his head bent low. He felt terrible, but he had learned a valuable lesson for the future. Honesty is the best policy—and playing hooky never pays!

JUNIOR G-MEN

"SURROUND them, men!" shouted little Cal Cub. The badges on their chests gleaming bravely in the sunlight, the officers spread out swiftly, in a surrounding movement.

"Charge!" shouted Cal, and the police raced forward, converging on the robbers. The battle was furious but brief, and, as usual, the cops won the game.

"That's all for today!" "Chief" Cal called to the other animal kids. "We're really getting good at this. Maybe when we're grown up, we'll all become policemen! We'll have another game of cops and robbers tomorrow!"

"I'm sorry, kids, but you won't be able to!" said Constable Pupp, walking up at that moment. Behind him limped a sour-looking old billy goat, leaning on a heavy cane. "As you know, this land you're playing on belongs to Mr. George Goat here, and he's complained that your game makes too much noise. So—you'll have to play somewhere else."

"And see that you stay off my property!" snapped Mr. Goat, raising his cane threateningly.

"Aw, gee," complained Cal, as the kids straggled off. "this was the only good playing field in town! We'll have to go outside the town to find someplace to play on from now on."

And so, the next day, they set out to find another good playground. Passing George Goat's property, they looked longingly at the wide, smooth field, but kept going.

Suddenly they heard a shrill cry behind them. Whirling about, Cal saw five burly wolves running out of George Goat's house. And over the shoulder of one of them was slung the struggling figure of old Mr. Goat himself!

"It's a kidnaping!" Cal shouted. "Come on, gang!"

With an enthusiastic yell, the other little animals set out behind Cal. The kidnapers were now dragging Mr. Goat out through the gate, where an automobile was waiting for them.

"Surround them, men!" shouted Cal, just as he always did when they were playing games. The other youngsters spread out obediently.

"Now . . . charge!" Cal yelled, and the five wolves went down under a swarm of athletic youngsters.

What a whirlwind struggle there was! And when it was over, the five kidnapers lay panting and battered on the ground as the youngsters tied them up securely.

Old Mr. Goat tottered to his feet shakily. "They—they were going to hold me for ransom!" he gasped. "You boys . . . were marvelous!" He took a deep breath and steadied himself.

"From now on," he added, "you youngsters can play on my property anytime you want to, noise or no noise. I thought you were just a bunch of silly young scamps . . . now I see you were really training yourselves to become useful adults! The field is yours anytime you want it!"

With a delighted whoop, the kids scampered onto the field once more, as Sheriff Bear and Constable Pupp came along to jail the five kidnapers.
